Big Turnout for Youth Parliament Vote

A vote among school children on the issues which matter most to them brought a big response. Of the 206 children at the Secondary School, 155 turned out to vote – a 76% turnout. That's much bigger than any general election.

There were ten issues to choose from. The first was Education and Learning which focused on access to university and other further or higher education. Other issues included:

- Health and Well Being,
- Rights, Equalities and Democracy,
- Jobs, the Economy and Benefits,
- Crime and Safety,
- Climate Change and the Environment,
- Youth Work and Young People's Services.

For Secondary School pupils, Education and Learning emerged as the top priority. This was followed by Jobs, the Economy and Benefits, with Crime and Safety coming third.

The same vote was taken right across the Overseas Territories with 18 schools taking part from the eleven participating Territories. A total of 3,057 votes were cast; the top priority for all Overseas Territories children is Education and Learning.

The purpose of the vote, claimed to be the biggest youth consultation of its kind, was to decide what issue should be debated in the UK Youth Parliament which met yesterday in the House of Commons. More than three hundred 11- to 18-year-olds are members of the UK Youth Parliament. Each member has been elected by the youth of their own locality. Representatives from the Overseas Territories and Crown Dependencies are invited to participate.

The UK Youth Parliament has been going strong for 25 years

Ruth Mobenge MYP - Member of Youth Parliament for Enfield (2023 to Present), had this to say about the importance of the UK Youth Parliament.

“Young people are already underrepresented in a body of elected representatives who make plans for OUR future. Hence, the UKYP gives us the opportunity to educate, discuss and debate topics of importance to young people across the UK. It has also given me the liberty to represent my young constituents in Parliament, signifying the importance of representation and the protection of our futures.”

St Helena has been ably represented at two previous Youth Parliaments by Kelly Yon. Kelly was studying in the UK at the time so travel and associated costs did not present a big problem. This year, financial and travel constraints mean it was not possible for St Helena to be represented.

Cerys and Isabella Destined for Epic Adventures with WAVYSAIL

The St Helena Open Oceans Fund, offered jointly by the St Helena Government and ocean adventure company Wavysail, is an action-packed and life-changing experience. The opportunity to jump in and enjoy comes around every year. Cerys Joshua and Isabella Scott have done just that.

Wavysail offer three types of ocean adventure. There is 'Relaxing' or 'Stretching', but for Cerys and Isabella there is just one type available, and that is 'Epic'. Starting from St Helena means it's got to be Epic. Cerys has already left for Cape Town to join the rest of the crew to sail back to St Helena. When Cerys arrives, Isabella will take over for the voyage back to Cape Town. The whole voyage, out and back takes 48 days and costs over £7,000. Cerys is just finishing her 'prep week' now. She's learning everything she needs to know to plan and execute a major ocean voyage. Next week she will be on the open ocean, sailing up the west coast of Africa to Namibia. There is a break along the Namib coast to explore Lüderitz and the desert 'ghost' town of Kolmanskop. Then it's westward across the wide blue to St Helena.

'Wavy' Immelman, who must have spent more time at sea than on land, is co-owner of Wavysail

The Wavysail website explains, "For the more intrepid, Epic Voyages take you on unparalleled sailing expeditions, exploring remote and awe-inspiring destinations around the globe." This year, St Helena is the only Epic adventure offered, (too late, they are all sold out) but the Seychelles is often available as another Epic. All the ocean adventures, from Relaxing to Epic do not require sailing experience. The skipper and first mate have many years of experience and ocean miles behind them. They teach the skills of ocean sailing as part of the package.

What More Can Be Done to Keep Our Working Population on St. Helena?– Written By Ed Oyewo

I was chatting with a young man the other day, someone I do have regular chat with during my time in the Education Portfolio. Bright fellow, hardworking, exactly the sort of person we need building our future here on St. Helena. And then he told me, quite matter-of-factly, that he's off to the Falklands. It stopped me cold. Here we go again, I thought. So as I watched this young man's eyes light up talking about his upcoming move, I had to ask myself: what are we doing wrong?

The statistics paint a sobering picture. Our island population has been in steady decline, falling from its peak in 1987 to just under 4,000 residents today. More alarmingly, the working-age population (those between 15 and 64) has dropped from about 3,500 in 1987 to just under 2,400 in 2024. Meanwhile, our elderly population has more than doubled, from around 500 to over 1,100 in the same period. In 2024 alone, we had 59 deaths compared to just 17 births. Three times as many deaths as births. Let that sink in.

Compare this to the Falklands, where the population has doubled since 1980, unemployment sits below 1%, and the average income is around £30,000 per year. Meanwhile, here on St. Helena, our median annual wage for 2023/24 was £10,490. That's roughly a third of what workers earn in the Falklands, and barely a third of the UK's median earnings. Yet our cost of living is estimated to be 25% higher than the UK.

It doesn't take an economist to understand why our young people are leaving.

The Education Question

As someone who served in the Education Portfolio, this issue is particularly close to my heart. We pride ourselves on our education system, and rightly so in many respects. Education is free for all children aged 3 to 16. We follow the English National Curriculum through Key Stages 1-3, and our students sit for GCSEs and A-levels. But here's the uncomfortable truth: what use are good GCSE results if there's no future for these young people on the island?

We educate our children to international standards, fill their heads with knowledge and ambition, teach them to dream big, and then what? Or they finish school here, look around at the limited opportunities, and realise that everything they've learned has prepared them for a life somewhere else.

The Value We Place on Education: Let's examine what value we actually place on education beyond the classroom walls. When I look at other British Overseas Territories, I see a stark contrast.

In Bermuda, those with bachelor's degrees earn 63% more than high school graduates. The message there is clear: education pays. In the Cayman Islands, 98% literacy rates are matched with thriving financial services and tourism sectors. Nearly half of all Falklands adults have post-secondary or vocational qualifications, and that investment is rewarded with competitive salaries and full employment.

We say we value education, but do our wages reflect that? Do our career opportunities reward academic achievement? When a young person with a university degree can earn three times their St. Helena salary by simply boarding a plane to the Falklands, what incentive have we given them to stay?

Education Without Opportunity Is Just Preparation for Departure: This is the heart of our problem. We've built a respectable education system in isolation from economic reality. It's like teaching someone to swim in a pool and then expecting them to stay when the ocean is calling.

Our students learn IT skills for jobs that don't exist here. They study business management for a private sector that consists primarily of two large employers. They train in hospitality for a tourism industry that, despite the airport opening in 2017, remains frustratingly underdeveloped. We need to ask ourselves some hard questions. Are we educating young people for St. Helena's future, or for someone else's workforce? Are we creating opportunities that match the aspirations we've helped them develop? Are we valuing the education we provide with salaries and career pathways that make staying a viable choice?

What Can Be Done?

The answer isn't to lower our educational standards or stop sending students abroad for university. That would be cutting off our nose to spite our face. Rather, we need to build an economy that can absorb and reward educated workers.

First, we must address the wage gap honestly. A median salary of £10,490 in an environment where living costs exceed the UK is simply unsustainable for retaining talent.

Small, incremental increases to the minimum wage, while helpful, don't address the fundamental problem that skilled, educated workers can triple their income by leaving. Second, we need to develop sectors that offer genuine career progression. Third, we must make the connection between education and employment explicit and robust. What use is a Community College offering courses if there aren't jobs waiting for graduates? We need businesses, government, and teachers working together to ensure that what we teach matches what we need. Fourth, we should examine successful models from other British Overseas Territories. The Falklands Government, the largest employer there with 750 staff, actively recruits across various professional fields. They've created an environment where education translates directly into employment opportunities. Why can't we do the same?

A Personal Plea: When I think about that young man heading to the Falklands, I don't blame him one bit. He's doing what's rational, what's necessary for his future. The question isn't why are our young people leaving, but why would they stay?

We've given them education. We've given them hope. We've given them the tools to succeed anywhere in the world. What we haven't given them is a reason to succeed here.

It's time we gave them a reason to come back. Or better yet, a reason never to leave in the first place. Till Next Time, keep Well.

St Helena - Spider Heaven

Do You suffer from Arachnophobia? If so Pass on

Earlier this year two new spider species were discovered on the Peaks. Two papers have been published recording the research on these X-Factor spiders and they have featured at a recent conference

More spider papers published on St Helena & Ascension

Two more papers from the research group led by Danni Sherwood have been published on spiders of Saint Helena and Ascension Island.

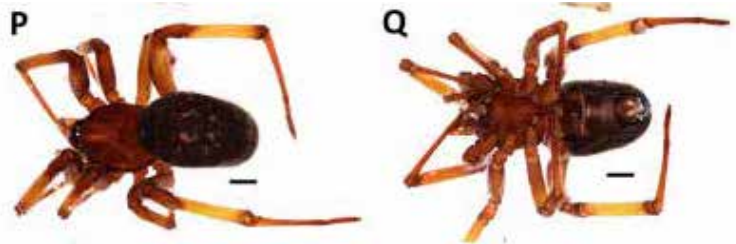

In the first paper, the INNS (invasive non-native species) spiders of Saint Helena are catalogued, with identifying characteristics, like genitalia, illustrated (see example overpage), in a collaboration with St Helena Government Agricultural and Natural Resources Division and St Helena National Trust. This paper was funded by the Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office (FCDO) St Helena Cloud Forest Project, supported by the Species Recovery Trust and RSPB.

114 known spider species on St Helena

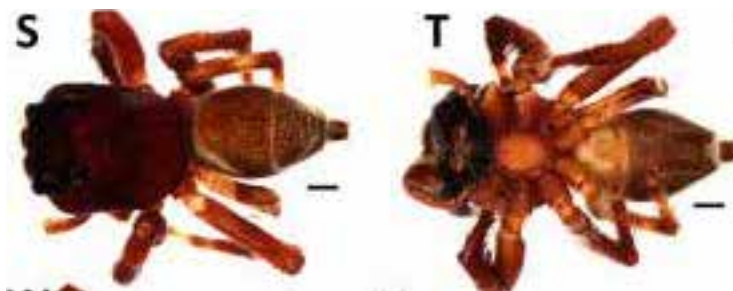

In the second paper, the modern annotated checklist of spiders of Ascension Island is finally published after no such list having been updated in over 60 years. Sherwood et al. provide the first analysis of genus and species endemism within a modern taxonomic context, showing only one genus and handful of species are possible endemics. The researchers found also three new INNS species established on the island, further reinforcing the threat to endemics. This paper was funded by the UK Government through Darwin Plus grants DPLUS135 and DPLUS 216.

US Government Shuts Down and Costs Go Up Do it the St Helena Way

In the US they can't agree their government spending budget, so the government has shut down. The shut down has lasted over a month and big problems are surfacing. It's the 11th shutdown in modern US history and the 3rd during a Trump presidency.

There is the politics of constant chaos. They should take a leaf out of St Helena's book; we'll do anything for a quiet life. In the US, 42 million of the poorest people get food stamps, which is a bit like food rationing in the UK during and after the Second World War. As usual the poorest are hit hardest. It's half-rations now as the money starts to run out. The thousands of businesses on government contracts don't know when they will start a job or when they will get paid if they do. Already they are trying to manage the Trump tariffs – which can change daily, depending on what mood Trump is in when he wakes in the morning. The effect of all this is that prices have increased, slowly but surely, since Trump started in January this year. Unemployment is up a bit too.

It's very possible the St Helena government spending budget has been delayed more than eleven times in recent decades but the same uneventful procedure is used here on these occasions. The Councillors are assembled as Legislative Council to rollover the existing budget for the first three months of the forthcoming year. Annoying? Definitely. Causes missed opportunities? Certainly. Creates Uncertainty? Doubtlessly. But basic Island pensions and IRB still get paid and there are no mass layoffs among government workers. It's true, our price inflation is more than the US and our workers are not unemployed, they leave the island. We prefer the politics of the enduringly ineffective to the politics of constant chaos.

Would you ride a bike in Jo'burg – Me Neither The young cycling enthusiasts reclaiming the streets of Johannesburg

Bike culture, once seen as an elite hobby or a last resort for the poor, is flourishing in the post-apartheid 'City of Gold'

On a hot Saturday Spring morning, Karabo Mashele urged a group of female cyclists up the hills of a plush Johannesburg suburb. "Come on my ladybugs," the 32-year-old shouted over the sounds of 4X4 cars overtaking the riders. "You can do hard things!"

Twice a month, Mashele, who only learned to cycle aged 29, leads Girls on Bikes, casual rides for up to 25 women in their 20s and 30s, through Johannesburg or Pretoria. On other weekends, she and a core group join longer, mixed gender rides.

Karabo Mashele, the founder of the Girls on Bikes bicycle club, on the streets of Johannesburg

With a population of nearly 5 million, Johannesburg is not designed for cyclists or pedestrians, with dense townships and sprawling suburbs connected by highways. Less than 1.5% of commuters cycle to work, the majority of them migrant workers from other southern African countries. Bikes are usually seen as either an elite hobby or a last resort for the poor.

South Africa's metropolitan areas haven't changed much since apartheid ended more than three decades ago, with poorer black workers commuting to wealthier areas from the townships. However, the members of

Are we living in a golden age of stupidity?

From brain-rotting videos to AI creep, every technological advance seems to make it harder to work, remember, think and function independently ...

Nataliya Kosmyna spends a lot of her time reading and analysing people's brain states. Another project she is working on is a wearable device – one prototype looks like a pair of glasses – that can tell when someone is getting confused or losing focus. Around two years ago, she began receiving out-of-the blue emails from strangers who reported that they had started technology such as ChatGPT and felt their brain had changed as a result. Their memories didn't seem as good – was that even possible, they asked her? Kosmyna herself had been struck by how quickly people had already begun to rely on generative AI. She noticed colleagues using ChatGPT at work, and the applications she received from researchers hoping to join her team started to look different. Their emails were longer and more formal and, sometimes, when she interviewed candidates on Zoom, she noticed they kept pausing before responding and looking off to the side – were they getting AI to help them, she wondered, shocked. And if they were using AI, how much did they even understand of the answers they were giving?

With some colleagues, Kosmyna set up an experiment to monitor people's brain activity while they wrote essays, either with no digital assistance, or with the help of an internet search engine, or ChatGPT. She found that the more external help participants had, the lower their level of brain connectivity, so those who used ChatGPT to write showed significantly less activity in the brain networks associated with cognitive processing, attention and creativity. Whatever the people using ChatGPT felt was going on inside their brains, the scans showed there wasn't much happening up there.

The study's participants, were asked, right after they had handed in their work, if they could recall what they had written. "Barely anyone in the ChatGPT group could give a quote," Kosmyna says. "That was concerning, because you just wrote it and you do not remember anything."

She observes, writing an essay requires skills that are important in our wider lives: the ability to synthesise information, consider competing perspectives and construct an argument. You use these skills in everyday conversations. "How are you going to deal with that? Are you going to be, like, 'Err ... can I just check my phone?'"

We know, that once you become accustomed to the hyper efficient cybersphere, the friction-filled real world feels harder to deal with. So, you avoid phone calls, use self-checkouts, order everything from an app; you reach for your phone to do the maths sum you could do in your head. “It’s only software developers and drug dealers who call people users,” Kosmyna mutters at one point, frustrated at AI companies’ determination to push their products on to the public before we fully understand the psychological and cognitive costs.

Andrew Mountbatten Windsor Keeps His Campaign Medal His South Atlantic Medal Is not Taken Back

His former Royal Highness Prince Andrew, Duke of York, Earl of Inverness and Baron Killyleagh who was also a Royal Knight Companion of the Most Noble Order of the Garter and a Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order will keep his South Atlantic campaign medal awarded for his service in the Falklands War. As such, he will retain his membership of the South Atlantic Medal Association. The former prince served in the Royal Navy for 22 years. During the military conflict with Argentina in the Falkland Islands he was a Sea King helicopter co-pilot. One of his tasks was to act as a decoy for Argentina's Exocet missiles.

29,700 South Atlantic Medals were awarded to British military personnel and civilians who served in the conflict to liberate the Falkland Islands and South Georgia. 13,000 medals were awarded to Royal Navy personnel, one of which was received by the then Prince Andrew.

In January 2022 the late Queen Elizabeth II sought to distance him from the monarchy by stripping him of his military affiliations and royal patronages. However, he retained the honorary rank of vice-admiral, given in 2015, but that too is now being withdrawn.

Simon Weston, a veteran of the Falklands War

It is reported Falklands veterans have said it would be “morally indefensible” for a medal earned through active service to be taken away.

Simon Weston, 64, who was severely burned when his troop transport RFA Sir Galahad was attacked during the conflict, said “He has lost all other aspects of dignity, respect and honour he was ever once shown. But the one thing you cannot strip away from the man, no matter how vindictive, vicious or virtue-signalling you want to be is that moment in his life where he was dignified, honourable and courageous.”

Another senior defence source who served in the Falklands said that to strip Mountbatten Windsor of his campaign medal would be an “extraordinary” move.

“Instinctively, if one does something brave it seems extraordinary to then go and say someone hasn’t done something brave,”

2,090 civilians were awarded the South Atlantic Medal in recognition of their involvement in the Falklands War. Among that number are the volunteer crew of the RMS St Helena, the only civilian ship to be requisitioned for Falklands service.

St Helena Tourism and Airlink Announce 18-Month Flight Schedule

St Helena Island
15.9450°S A breath of fresh air 5.7089°W

4th November 2025 – St Helena Tourism is pleased to announce, in partnership with our airline partner Airlink, the release of an 18-month forward flight schedule to St Helena Island.

Airlink will continue to operate its regular weekly Saturday service between Johannesburg (JNB) and St Helena (HLE), maintaining consistent connectivity between the island and mainland Africa. In addition, from mid-December 2026 through to mid-March 2027, Airlink will introduce a seasonal Tuesday return service between Cape Town and St Helena, catering to increased travel demand during the southern summer months.

While the published schedule extends 18 months into the future, it is important to note that flights can only be booked up to 360 days in advance, in line with Airlink's booking system. Travellers and tourism operators can therefore plan ahead with confidence, knowing flight timings and service frequencies well beyond the current booking window.

Bookings can be made directly via the Airlink website or through your local travel agent.

"This 18-month schedule demonstrates our continued collaboration with Airlink and our shared commitment to making St Helena more accessible to travellers from across the globe," said Minister Karl Thrower, Minister for Economic Development for St Helena. "It reflects the island's steady growth as a distinctive, authentic travel destination offering a unique blend of history, culture, marine, hiking, conservation, and adventure activities."

Katherine Whelan, Chief Commercial Officer of Airlink, added: "We are proud to continue connecting St Helena to the world through our Johannesburg and seasonal Cape Town services. The release of this extended schedule gives travellers the confidence to plan well in advance and supports the island's ongoing tourism and economic development. St Helena is a remarkable destination, and Airlink is delighted to play a role in opening it up to more visitors."

Letter to the Editor: Before Taxing Ultra-Processed Foods

During Ministers' Question Time on Tuesday, the Minister mentioned that consideration might have to be given to taxing highly-processed foods - or ultra-processed foods.

While this may sound sensible from a health perspective given the growing cost to the health budget, it's important to remember that highly-processed foods cover a wide range of everyday items. These include ready-made meals, cereals, sausages, burgers and even bread—one of our staple foods, ham, chopped ham, polony, chilli loaf and cheese spread, all sandwich fillers. In fact, anything that contains preservatives, artificial colouring, flavouring, or emulsifiers are additives that falls into this category.

Healthier alternatives are often far more expensive and simply out of reach for low-income earners. The price of imported fresh fruit is outrageously high and unaffordable as an everyday staple. Local farmers deserve our support, but they must also cover their costs, which makes local produce pricier. By promoting locally grown fruit and vegetables, without adding extra costs, our shops could help support local growers, and make fresh healthy food accessible for all.

Before introducing any new tax on highly-processed foods, government should consider the wider challenges of low wages, high utility costs, and the general cost of living which is impacting our health.

Improving public health requires everyone's involvement—but it starts with making healthy food realistic and affordable. The government must lead by addressing the underlying challenges to a healthy population, rather than thinking about another tax without first establishing a solid foundation.

Galway Cup (Governor's Cup) Interrupted by Fog – Rescheduled for November 16th

Report by SHGC

The prestigious Galway Cup, also known as the Governor's Cup in honour of Sir Henry Lionel Galway KCMG DSO, who founded the then Longwood Golf Course in 1903, got underway on Sunday, 2nd November 2025 at the St Helena Golf Club.

This year's competition is proudly sponsored by the Club Committee and marked the first tournament of the month, drawing a strong turnout of 22 players.

Unfortunately, after the first nine holes, dense fog and rain moved in and settled over the course, significantly impairing visibility and compromising player safety. As a result, the competition had to be called off.

The Galway Cup 18-hole competition has now been rescheduled to Sunday, 16th November 2025.

- Players who have already paid for the competition will not be required to pay again.
- New players are welcome to join.
- Regrettably, no refunds will be issued to those who paid but are unable to participate on the new date.

In the meantime, the club will host the Monthly Medal Competition on Remembrance Sunday, 9th November 2025, provided there is sufficient player interest.

- Tee-off time for the Monthly Medal is 12:00 PM.

Players are encouraged to confirm their participation early to ensure smooth planning and a successful event.

Happy swinging...!

FROM THE COUCH

Contributed by Leigh & Louis

Match of the week, chosen and reported on by 10 year old Football Enthusiast Louis this week was Saturday games between Manchester United and Nottingham Forest .

Amad scored a stunning late volley to rescue a dramatic 2-2 draw for Manchester United against Nottingham Forest at the City Ground.

The Red Devils appeared poised for defeat on the first anniversary of Ruben Amorim's appointment as manager after making a dreadful start to the second half.

Man Utd were leading at the interval through Casemiro's header, but quickfire goals from Morgan Gibbs-White and Nicolo Savona in the space of 102 seconds turned the game on its head.

However, Amad intervened in magnificent fashion with nine minutes remaining to secure a share of the spoils, ensuring the hosts' long wait for a first league victory since the opening weekend of the season continued.

Man Utd could have gone second in the Premier League table with a victory but the draw still sees them climb a place to fifth, while Forest remain in 18th position, now four points behind Burnley
